In a paper entitled "Fallacies respecting Coaling Stations," which appears in the May issue of the United Service Magazine, Ad. miral P. H. COLOMB advances some important propositions. He shows that the Case. Por Bot. Imperial Government are in some danger of making a very serious miscalculation in the preparations for Imperial defence. The question he raises is, "How are our coaling stations to be defended?" "Mainly by the the Legislative Council an Ordinance that will fleet," say the naval officers, while some of the military engineers would persuade us to put our trust in fortifications. Admiral Colomb states the case in terms almost identical with those recently used by a German Admiral in the discussion about the use to be made of Heligoland. "The islands," says the German writer, "always fall to the Power "that has the sea." Admiral Conome says: -" It is not our hold of Malta that/gives us the command of the Mediterraneun in war.

"but our command of the Mediterranean "which gave and keeps us our hold on "Malta." The same of course applies to all the ports that are accessible from Europe only by sea-to Aden, Colombo, Singapore, Hongkong, Mauritius, St. Helena, &c. These he still held fast to his bag, advised him to put brought himself before the Courts; as his case forward the difficulty of using the Hygeia and stations must be kept open for British merchant ships by men-of-war controlling the surrounding waters. If there is no such naval protection a single hostile cruiser could effectually close these ports by proventing the ingress and egress of merchant ......... 4.50 0.40 vessels. If there were a British Squadron or even a few patrolling cruisers in the vicinity the enemy could not blockado the port against trading vessels, and would have to engage in a naval fight before attacking the defences by bombardment or by landing
